Absham's grave was never superstitiously reverenced.

Keil's interpretation is curious, viz. f "God's intention was to place Moses in the came category with Enoch and Elijah. God burying the body with his own hand imparted a power to it which preserved it from corruption and prepared the way for it to pass into the same form of existence to which Enoch and Elijah were taken, without either death or burial. This is the basis of the Jewish theologoumenon mentioned by Jide of the contest between Michael and the devil."

It is a terror to contemplate the infinite power of God. It fills one with awe and dread to conceive of an absolutely irresistable might, that does its pleasure in heaven and earth. But fear is turned to confidence when we apprehend the additional truth, that omnipotence is diretted by infinite knowedge. Perfect safely, is thereby assured. And further both the power and knowledge. Perfect safely, is thereby assured. And further both the power and knowledge of God erables Him to know my need, the omnipotence of God enables Him to meet if the love of God inclines Him to meet if the love of God inclines Him to do set Well may we say "Now therefore, our God, we thank Thee and praise Thy glorious name."

green sward into a crowded and ugly stoneyard is certainly to be deprecated.

Browning satirizes a vulgar pride and jealcus ostentation in his inimitable poem, "The Bishop Orders His Tonb."

Moses is a fine example of the "young old rian," of whom there are more living to-day than perhaps ever before, thanks to physical culture and hygienic observance. It should be the rule, not the exception, to find, even in extreme age, the eye undimined and the natural force unabated.

Folly of being wedded to a theory is illustrated in those who affirm the Mosalc authorship of even the thirty-fourth chapter of Deuteronomy. The straits they are put to are severe. Some say Moses had a special revelation, others that he satisficated the event and described it. Josephus and Philosoffirm that Moses wrote the account of his own death to prevent his being belied.

Secret burial of Moses was not intended to conceal his grave for the purpose of guarding against a superstitious and idelatrous reverence. There could be no fear of that on account of the opinion held by the Israelites that corpses and graves defiled. Even Abraham's grave was never superstitiously reverenced.

Reil's interpretation is curious, viz. 5
